

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is an example of the dangers of media consolidation. Large corporations are very keen on manipulating public sentiment, and there is no need for citizens to have to put up with this.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. When large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
